Youth Mental Health Communication Toolkit

No Shame in Your Brain/Consciente de tu Mente

Youth in the State of Washington have faced many challenges over the course of the past three years. The contents of this toolkit provide social media assets and posters to share positive messaging and supportive resources. These materials may be used by any community partner, organization, or individual in the hopes that we can share the message of hope, resilience, and inclusivity.

Principles of this toolkit

- Any Washington State agency or partner organization is free to use some or all elements of this plan to promote youth mental health.
- Messaging should promote a positive narrative, avoid negative or unsafe language/imagery.
- Messaging should promote acceptance.
- Messaging should point to state and national resources.
- Messaging can leverage the work of the existing campaign (No Shame in Your Brain/Consciente de tu Mente) that focuses on positive youth traits and supportive resources.

Goals of this toolkit

- Socialize mental health as a positive concept for young people
- Promote help-seeking
- Promote acceptance
- Provide resources to build coping skills and resiliency
- Be inclusive
- Reduce stigma around mental health conditions and seeking/receiving help
- Increase awareness
- Include resource and messaging in both English and Spanish

Key points

- Feelings of distress—including anxiety, nervousness, sadness/hopelessness, suicidal thoughts and attempts—are high and rising among youth of middle and high school ages in Washington State.
- While 90% of youth nationally say mental health is a priority, just 40% rate their own mental health highly, and they are eager for skills to cope.
- Talking about mental health is hard, and youth fear embarrassment about what others will think of them if they ask for help.
- This campaign seeks to destigmatize mental health and equip youth with ways to access and ask for help.
- Everyone struggles at times, but if a problem is lasting too long, is too intense or feels like more than an individual can handle, we can encourage one another to reach out for help.
- Celebrating individual teens as unique, fantastic, and complex may help to reduce stigma when it comes to their mental health.
